

Dear Family,

A note from your student's class

This week your student learned about four career archetypes: Employee, Entrepreneur, Investor and Hybrid. They aren't job titles. They're income models that describe how money flows to a person.

Employee

Trades time for money under a formal agreement.

Entrepreneur

Builds a system, a business, that earns revenue.

Investor

Puts money they already have to work earning more.

Hybrid

Combines two or more models on purpose.

Try this in the car or at the store:

Ask your student to explain each one, and which archetype they think describes your household's income. It isn't a test. It's a conversation starter, and the answer might surprise you both.

For the adults: think about your own income model. Are you an employee? A hybrid? Have you ever considered adding a second stream? You don't need answers. Having this conversation with your student is one of the most valuable money conversations you can have this week.

Thank you for your partnership.
